“ I just happened upon this today while searching for a friends obituary. I am so sorry for your loss. I didn't know about this until now! or I would have came to the funeral. Bob was a wonderful compassionate friend and brother! I will miss him.

“ It is never easy to say goodbye. Especially to someone that you respect and love. Bob Ramsey was more than a man. Bob will be remembered because he wore red socks, he always was fun to be around, he was a hard, never tiring worker, and he was talented as a handyman. His career was an electrician but he was a mechanic and a carpenter. He understood how to build a house and a barn, he understood how to make a car run. It is hard to say goodbye to the person that I would call my second dad. I slowly became a part of Bob's life because I dated and eventually married his oldest daughter. Over the years I learned that once you became part or the Bob Ramsey family, you would always be part of his family. Even when things were difficult between us because of choices his daughter and I made, he was always welcoming to me. I remember a time that I came to his house on Christmas to pick my daughter (his granddaughter) I was invited in and he insisted that everyone should have a present and I received a small Craftsman socket set that have used often and still have to this day. Bob is a great man and he will be missed and remembered not because of the buildings he built, the garden he grew, the cars he owned or any of his other earthly accomplishments, he will be honored and missed because of his love. His love for family and friends and his willingness to always offer a hand of love.

I have to share one last story. I showed up once again to pick up my daughter and was invited in and offered a place at the diner table. As always there was lively conversation. Bob was sharing that everything on the table was either grown in their garden or raised on their farm in Brookville Indiana. He finished by saying "We don't much care if Kroger or Meijer both close." He was proud to be self sufficient as he should've been. I thought for a second or two and then added, "I didn't care if Kroger or Meijer closed either, as long as McDonald's and Wendy's stayed opened." Bob smiled and I know that he thought that I was just being my normal self. I can only hope to be remembered when I cross over as we all will remember Bob Ramsey.
