“ Hold her hand strong, for your mother’s grip on life won’t last. Her angel feet no longer dance, but float above the Earth, gracing the skies with smiles and melody. If only one more time she could pillar you to salt with her gaze while near the road you often played, or tend to the endless wounds, and mend the pants so torn...the feathery touch of kindness or words of scorn...only to have them both again. If only. If only.
